Growth Sites

'A collection of electric blue crystal growth furniture.'

About Growth Sites

Growth Sites is a collection of furniture that has been invaded by a strange, electric blue crystal growth. Our traditional understanding of furniture and its role as a functional object is being hijacked and subverted by external forces of equal parts geology and chemistry.

About Elliot Bastianon

Elliot Bastianon is a furniture designer based in Canberra, Australia. Graduating in 2012 from the Australian National University with a BA/BVA (Honours), he has a diverse material palette and attempts to extrapolate the most from everyday things around him; often combining materials in ways that he hopes will direct his practice down a path not often taken. For Bastianon, furniture isn't just something utilitarian. It's an apparatus of communication, a tool to deliver a message or encourage a different way of seeing the world.

About The Milan Project

The Milan Project is an exhibition of contemporary objects by Australian designers Andrew Carvolth and Damon Moon. At the edge of art and design, craft and industry, Carvolth and Moon explore notions of function and materiality through a series of timber and ceramic objects.

About Damon Moon

A second generation craftsman, Damon is one of Australia's most respected makers, writers and commentators working in the field of ceramics. He is currently Creative Director of the Ceramics Studio at the JamFactory in Adelaide, South Australia. In this role he brings together both industry and artistic expertise in design and production, training, research and advocacy.

About Andrew Carvolth

Andrew is a craftsman and designer based in Adelaide, South Australia. After graduating from Design Arts at the Australian National University School of Art, Andrew established a design practice producing speculative exhibition work, commissions and limited edition objects. In a world of specialists, Andrew considers himself a generalist. By exploring many facets of craft, materials and process, Andrew brings a unique perspective and approach to contemporary Australian design.
